Idea and Purpose of the Knowledge Gift

Health Systems Matter (HSM) is a knowledge platform rooted in the belief that “Information is power.” This principle holds even greater significance in today’s data-driven era, where staying informed can profoundly impact both personal and professional growth—especially for global health and development professionals.

As a public health-focused knowledge hub, HSM aims to equip emerging public health and development professionals with relevant information that fosters both enlightenment and professional advancement. HSM believes that well-organized, evidence-based insights serve as a powerful resource for professionals seeking to deepen their understanding and make informed decisions.

This document presents structured information on various organizations, their work, and modes of engagement, ultimately enhancing professionals’ knowledge, career development, and confidence as public health and development leaders.

Understanding the purpose of this document and utilizing it effectively can provide valuable insights and opportunities for growth.

Explore. Engage. Excel.

Organizations and Agencies

United Nations (UN) Based Organizations

The United Nations (UN) is a global organization comprising multiple specialized agencies, programs, and bodies that work together to address international issues such as public health, peace, security, development, humanitarian aid and human rights

Agencies

Multilateral and bilateral agencies play a crucial role in international development, trade, and diplomacy. Below is a list of prominent multilateral and bilateral agencies:

Multilateral agencies involve multiple countries and are often funded by contributions from member nations. They focus on global issues like development, health, and trade.

Bilateral agencies are funded and operated by a single country to provide aid, trade, and development assistance to other nations.

Both play complementary roles in international development and diplomacy.

Research, Policy and Think Tank Organizations and Institutes

These three types of organizations are grouped together because they share significant similarities, yet each serves a distinct function. They play a crucial role in shaping knowledge, policies, and decision-making across various fields, including public health, social development, and global affairs. While their approaches differ, all aim to influence decision-making through research and analysis. Many also operate on a global scale, collaborating with governments, donors, and international organizations.
